CAREER OF THE WEEK

Paediatrician

Paediatricians diagnose and treat health conditions that affect babies, children and young people.

You can get into this job through:

- University
- An apprenticeship

Day to day tasks

Day to day, you could:

- assess children who are ill, injured or have disabilities
- refer patients to specialist consultants for tests
- prescribe medication, surgery or therapies
- explain diagnosis and treatments to parents and children
- write patient notes, monitor progress and produce medical reports
- supervise and train junior medical staff

UNIVERSITY

To become a paediatrician you'll need to complete:

- a degree in medicine recognised by the General Medical Council
- a 2-year foundation programme of general training
- specialist training which takes a minimum of 8 years

A medical degree normally takes 5 years to complete. Some courses have the option to include an extra year if you want to study a subject further. This is called an intercalated year.

You might be able to study a foundation year before starting a medical degree. This will depend on your circumstances or if you have not studied enough sciences. Check with the admissions department where you want to study.

Career Progression

With experience, you could:

- become a senior consultant, once you're on the General Medical Council Specialist Register
- lead a team or manage a department
- become medical director for an NHS trust
- move into teaching students, trainee doctors and other healthcare professionals

APPRENTICESHIP

You might be able to do a doctor degree apprenticeship which will take around 5 years to complete. The apprenticeship is recognised by the General Medical Council.

You could then progress to the foundation course of general training before completing the specialist training.
