CAREER OF THE WEEK

Fashion Designer

Fashion designers produce new clothing and fashion ranges using their creative and technical skills

You can get into this job through:

- A college course
- A university course

Day to day tasks

Day to day, you could:

- identify trends in fabrics, colours, prints and shapes
- develop new concepts and mood boards (a collection of items to capture a mood, like photos, fabric pieces or colour samples)
- create sketches and designs by hand or with computer-aided design (CAD) software
- work with product development teams to manage quality and costs
- supervise design assistants and patternmakers when making up product samples
- present ranges to production managers, merchandisers and customers

UNIVERSITY

You'll usually need a foundation degree, higher national diploma or degree.

Courses are widely available and include:

- fashion design
- art and design
- garment technology
- textiles

You should look for a course that covers both design and technical skills to get the practical knowledge needed by the industry

COLLEGE

You could do a college course, which would teach you some of the skills and knowledge you need to work in the fashion industry as an assistant.

Subjects include:

- fashion
- fashion and textiles
- craft and design

Once you've gained some experience with an employer, you may be able to do further training to become a fashion designer

Career Progression

With experience you could become a:

- senior designer
- head of a fashion department
- creative director

You might specialise in particular collections, for example childrenswear or sportswear, or move into other parts of the fashion business like marketing or buying.

You could develop business skills and go freelance, or start your own fashion company.

You may wish to pass on your skills and knowledge to students by teaching fashion design at college or university.
